NOTES:

Your schedule is based on the assumption that you have had limited walking or physical activity up to this point. Aim for 4-5 training walks per week.

This first month is geared to getting you on your feet and getting comfortable with walking. From here on there will be a gentle increase in distance and intensity that you can adjust to fit your own level of comfort and fitness.

At all costs try not to miss your long walk (Saturdays) even if this means switching to another day of the week. This is the cornerstone to gaining the endurance needed for a half marathon walk.

In this initial period the long walks should be done at an easy but brisk pace that allows you to achieve the endurance and distance with comfort.

NOTES:

Consider introducing some cross training (XTrain) on your off days. This might include resistance training (weights), flexibility (yoga, stretching), core strengthening (pilates, abdominal work), or some other form of aerobic exercise such as cycling. These alternative exercises can help lessen exercise boredom and help build overall physical fitness, cardio and strength which will in turn help improve your walking too.

During this month you will be introduced to hill training. This provides the benefit of boosting your cardio while also building leg muscles. Hill repeats should include a warm-up and cool-down period to help prevent injury or strain. See your manual for more details.

You will test your goal pace this month.

NOTES:

In this final month we will introduce Fartlek and Tempo training. These are meant to help build speed and cardio fitness. See your manual for more details.

In this final period you will have a chance to test your goal pace once again. It is a good opportunity to test your endurance at a faster pace and will help you set your time expectations for race day.

This month you will do a dress rehearsal in order to test your clothing and nutrition for race day. This is the longest walk you will do before race day.

In the last two weeks before race day you will “taper” down your training distances a bit to allow your body to rest in order to be ready for the BIG DAY!
